When SHTF

Preppers have long been concerned about amassing resources that would be taken by FEMA in an emergency. Maybe you have seen something like this in your mind's eye, too.

A line of armored vehicles on your street with armed men going door to door with FEMA on their shirts and taking the buckets and cans of food that you had stored for just this moment.

They walk in and out of your home, container after container and leave you hollowed out to face the disaster like the unprepared. It's a real concern for preppers but how concerned should you be?

Water

Water always has value in a disaster scenario. I hope you store some ready to drink water in your home and also catch some water from the sky. Having water filters and knowing where to get more water i.e., bodies of clean water is necessary.

In a disaster lots of water sources are contaminated. The water you have in your home might be all you have access to. If FEMA comes knocking you should have some to give, and some hidden or your family is going to be standing in line for a bottle of water from the case you already purchased.

Food

Can you imagine seeing all the food taken from your home in an emergency? Years of prepping just walked out the door by people who couldn't care less about you and your family.

This is why it is so important for you to maximize the use of multiple and hidden storage locations.

If we truly want to help, then we need to be able to hand over our "food storage" and have FEMA roll away with some resources before bringing our real stockpile together from these multiple and hidden locations.

Medicines

FEMA will take the necessary steps to procure medical equipment and medicines if they believe you have the types they are looking for. Your medical stockpiles would be at risk, and it is well within FEMA's scope of powers to take from you what they deem necessary.

In fact, medical is even worse than food because if FEMA deems you healthy then you don't need any of those medical preps you have been storing. They can take it all! They gotta leave you some food to sustain yourself but with medical it could be different.

Weapons

We do not have a lot of precedent for this, but a couple times is enough. We saw weapons confiscation in places like New Orleans and in Boston after the marathon bombing.

Nothing stands in the way of FEMA confiscating your preps like a 12 gauge shotgun.

Generators

Your generator is probably loud, right? Well, FEMA can hear it, too.

EO10997 gives federal power to FEMA so they can confiscate all kinds of fuel and power necessary to complete their mission. This could include your loud generator that they hear from a mile away.

FEMA is setting up camps during these disasters and some of those camps might require power, your power.

Fuel

The fuel you bring into a disaster area is the all the fuel you have while you are in that disaster area.

When it runs out you have to either leave the area or go find more. Your fuel stockpile would surely pique the interest of FEMA. They would have every right to take that fuel stockpile from you to power their vehicles and their efforts.

Radios & Comms

We have already established that FEMA has the law on its side if it wants to confiscate comms. That big antenna on your truck is going to be a dead giveaway. The larger the disaster the more resources FEMA is going to want or “need” to manage the situation.

They would love a few good Baofeng radios or a powerful HAM system to add to their comms operation. Where and how do you store your HAM radios? Is it time to find a more convert means of using them and keeping them secret and safe?
